

International Conference on Plasma Science

The International Conference on Plasma Science (ICOPS) is an annual meeting coordinated by the Plasma Science and Application Committee (PSAC) of the IEEE Nuclear & Plasma Sciences Society. ICOPS features reports from around the globe about new and innovative developments in the field of plasma science and engineering. Leading researchers will gather to explore basic plasma physics, high-energy-density-plasmas, inertial confinement fusion, magnetic fusion, plasma diagnostics, pulsed power plasmas, microwave generation, lighting, micro and nano applications of plasmas, medical applications and plasma processing. Plenary sessions will highlight progress in major areas, and will be accompanied by a range of contributed reports on both fundamental and applied studies.

Symposium on Fusion Engineering

The Symposium on Fusion Engineering (SOFE) is a biennial event coordinated by the Fusion Technology Committee of the IEEE Nuclear & Plasma Sciences Society. SOFE covers engineering and science advances in both inertial and magnetic confinement fusion, with attendees from major fusion energy research centers worldwide. Plenary sessions typically report on the status of the program and results from the major experimental facilities while the technical sessions cover a wide range of technologies associated with fusion research, including reactor design, plasma material interactions, plasma diagnostics, safety and environment, plasma control systems, magnets and electromagnetic systems, and more.
